ONTARIO SUMMERSAULTS TO WET SIDE

PEOPLE VOTE TO ELIMINATE WAR TIME TEMPERANCE ACT

Northern Neighbor Across Lake Erie Votes Liquor Control By the Government—Legislature To Enact Law By Next July—Thirsty People Across the Border To Be Provided For Is Belief—Despite Initial Suggested Restrictions That Citizens Only Might Purchase "Goods."

Prohibition suffered probably the most smashing defeat of its history on the North American continent in the Ontario elections held Wednesday.

Ontario has repudiated its war-time temperance act, embodying prohibition and has voted for a government control policy of liquor sales.

Premier G. Howard Ferguson's conservative party government, espousing the government sales plan, was returned to power by a sweeping majority over all other parties, blocs and combines involved in the wet and dry battle in the province's campaign leading to Wednesday's balloting.

On his return, Premier Ferguson and his party are pledged to repeal of the Ontario Temperance act, which banished bars and liquor stores, permitting the distribution of liquor on doctor's perscriptions only.

At 9 o'clock Wednesday night the victory of the wet cause was assured. At that hour when the returns had been tabulated on 79 members out of 112 in the new Provincial legislature 66, a clear majority, were pledged to the policy of Premier Ferguson.

The standing: Conservatives (for liquor sales) 63, Liberals 6, Progressives, 3, Liberal-progressives 3, Independent Liberals 2, Labor 1, Prohibitionist 1.

The extent of the upheaval against prohibition was reflected in that lone prohibitionist vote. It is improbable that in the tabulation of the vote in the remaining 33 ridings, as the legislative districts are termed, they will obtain even half their present number.

It was a wet triumph from the start of the count. Of the first 43 ridings to report 40 returned Conservative members. All 15 of Toronto's constituencies returned liquor-control candidates.

Ontario, in voting, sought to settle the greatest problem that has come with prohibition in the United States the bootlegger. Adoption of his government-supervised liquor distribution plan, Premier Ferguson argued, would strike a death blow at the bootlegger by killing off his trade. Government sales, he contended, would provide a far better temperance medium than the present law permitting sales on prescriptions.

Opposed to the Conservative party's platform stood the Liberal party, the Progressive and the Prohibitionists, arguing that if a Conservative legislature was returned liquor would be made more easily obtainable, thru adpotion of the government sales proposal.

These allied groups in the campaign demanded a continuance and stricter enforcement of the Ontario temperance act.

It is under this act that the socalled 4 beer is sold in the province, and extension of the act to include beer the summer of 1925 made Windsor, cross the river, the front instead of the back yard of Detroit. With liquor obtainable without the bother of a doctor's prescription. Detroit is shouting with joy—or at least that part of population that craves something stronger than beer, dispatches from that city say.

The platform of Premier Ferguson also calls for the sale of 4.4 beer under the government sales plan.

The Conservative or government forces presented a candidate Wednesday in all except one of the province's 112 legislative districts. The Liberals presented 60 candidates, the Progressives 20 and the Prohibitionists 30. In the present legislature the government holds 76 seats, against 35 for the combined opposition. One additional seat is in issue, since the establishment of a new district. Fifty-seven are needed for a majority.

The legislature, which usually meets early in February, will now put thru a lew authorizing the sales of beer and liquor in sealed packages in government stores at the earliest possible moment. This will not be later than July 1.

HAPPENINGS IN OUR STATE

Taken Direct From Wires By Correspondents of the United States Press Association.

Newark —Charles Lingafelter, 54, ended his life by hanging. He fastened a hay rope about his neck, tied the other end to a rafter in the barn and leaped thru a trap door. Despondency because of ill health is thought to have caused his act.

Wooster— The annual observance of Wooster day has been set for Deceber 11. Graduates scattered in all parts of the country will participate in some sort of a local observance of the day. To augment the various local programs Dr. Charles F. Wisehart will give a radio address.

MAKE CAPTURE BANK BANDITS IN SHORT TIME

Land Bank Robbers Four and a Half Hours After Commission of Crime.

Just four and one-half hours after the robbery of the Atlas Savings & Loan company in Cleveland, December 2, of $2,900 in cash, two suspects were held in jail in one of the quickest clean-ups in the history of Cleveland.

When Joseph J. Zid, manager of the bank, reported the holdup to the police, he gave the license number of the bandit's automobile. Within a few minutes, detectives went to the home of Harry Wold who told them that William Smith and Walter Campbell often borrowed the automobile.

Police broke into his room as Smith was undressing and arrested him. They secured a pistol and $783.

Miss Gladys Wentworth, of this city is a member of the freshmen debating squad of Wooster college.

This organization meets twice each month and holds debates among the members, and in this way fine material is under way for both men's and women's varsity squads of next year. The membership in the Freshman club is large, and the character of the personnel and the work that is being done indicate that much can be expected from this club in varsity forensics next year. Professor Miller is also in charge of the Freshman Debating club.

Yodling Lost Art in Switzerland Mountains

Lucerne—Yodling is a lost art in Switzerland. Shepherds and farm hands look askance at American tourists who ask them to yodle. A party of tourists visiting Switzerland repeatedly asked natives for a yodle or two. None responded. They all looked puzzled. Suddenly, just around a bend on the main road, came the thrilling notes of a perfect yodle and the visitors hurried to get a glimpse of the performer. He proved to be a lusty American tourist.

C. & O. WRECK.

A northbound Chesapeake & Ohio railroad freight train was wrecked at Duvall Wednesday afternoon. The wreck was caused by a broken axle, Nine hoppers loaded with coal left the rails piling promiscously and spreading over both tracks blocking all traffic for nearly 12 hours. Norfolk and Western railroad passenger trains 25 and 32 were annuled and were sent over the B. & O. railroad by way of Washington C. H., to Columbus and Chillicothe.

The papers were found in his handbag when he was nabbed at Cologne.

Tarzan of Mules Fasts 47 Days; Mulish as Ever

Washington.—The traditional toughness of the army mule again was upheld in a report received by the War department from the Forty-second infantry in Panama.

During the recent maneuvers one of the outfit's mules broke loose and strayed into the jungle.

A native found him 47 days later in a 10-foot pit on the edge of the jungle. The mule apparently had stumbled into the hole the day it ran away and had spent the whole period without food and only such rainwater as may have trickled in.

When found the animal was a living skeleton covered with ticks. It was taken to camp and now is reported to be as fat and sassy as ever.

Since home became merely a place for changing one's clothes, prospective buyers are mainly interested in knowing the number of baths and wardrobe closets.

PRICELESS TREASURES ARE STOLEN

Burglars Enter the Home of Bishop Hartley and Take Prized Possessions.

Sacred treasures of priceless worth to their owner were stolen by burglars who rifled the residence of Bishop James J. Hartley, Columbus, after gaining entrance from a side porch about 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon December 1.

Mourned most of all is a gold cross the gift of Pope Pius X, who died shortly before the World war. This is set with 12 diamonds in the center, has a ruby at each of the four arms of the cross, and contains sacred relics of the saints.

Other valuables taken include two gold rings with amethyst stone, one of which was surrounded by diamonds a solid gold hunting case watch, a woman's white gold ring set with diamonds, a gold dollar of old date and of octagonal shape and a gold cloth with a cluster of diamonds in the center.

Bishop Hartley is unable to set a value upon these jewels as practically everything was a gift, but the valuation runs into the thousands, he said

He announced Wednesday night that he was willing for the robbers to keep the rings and jewels if they will return the pectoral cross, which is of no value to those who have taken it.

Altho the house was completely ransacked by the burglars and finger prints were found by the police on the white woodwork it was not known that they had been there until Bishop Hartley arose.

Evidently the thieves were unafraid, as they approached the bishop's bed where he was sleeping, and stole various articles from the pockets of his vest hanking on a chair at the head of the bed. They overlooked a $50 bill in one of the pockets. "Bishop Hartley" was engraved on the watch.

The cross and chain and other jewelry were stolen from the dresser.

Following their successful haul on Bishop Hartley's the same robbers are believed to have attempted to force entrance to the residence of Rev. Father Robert Coburn in the cathedral parish house, 212 East Broad street. They entered by a side window and proceeded upstairs but fled when Rev. Father Coburn awakened as they were trying to open the door to his room.

Detectives Carson and McCall and a private detective are investigating the robbery. The work is said to bear the mark of professionals.

GETS $6,500 COMPENSATION

Don R. Mellett Died "In Line of Duty," Commission Says in Paying Full Claim of Widow.

Columbus, Dec. 1.—The State Industrial Commission yesterday awarded the widow of Don R. Mellett, Canton editor, the full death claim of $6,500.

Mrs. Mellett asked the sum under the workman's compensation law, claiming that Mellett was killed "in line of duty." Mellett was slain at the climax of a crusade he had been waging through his paper against underworld activities in Canton.

The award was made to Mrs. Mellett and her children. It is payable either at the rate of $18.75 weekly or in a lump sum. In addition the commission allowed $150 for funeral expenses.

The award was granted on the theory that newspaper men are always subjected to hazard and although Mellett's death occurred at his home it was the result of his employment.

ESKIMO WOMAN FOUGHT MATE TO SAVE CHILD

Slayer Is Acquitted After Telling Story to Newfoundland Court.

St. Johns, N. F.—How a little Eskimo woman fought to the death with her demented husband on a lonely Labrador island to save herself and her two children from being killed by him was tragically related in Supreme coure here. The wife, Julienne Tuttu, was acquitted.

Julienne and her husband and their children were the sole inhabitants of the island. She told how when put to the supreme test, with her own body broken and bruised by blows from her husband's gun during the struggle, she did not hesitate to stab him time after time with a sheath knife and then riddle his body with bullets from one of his rifles.

Her eyes welling with tears, Julienne through a Moravian missionary acting as interpreter, told the court how her husband, Ephram, came home on the evening of June 11, and said he was going to kill the baby. Stricken with fear she spent hours pleading with him to wait until morning, hoping that meantime someone would call at the island or that she might be able to attract the attention of persons on the mainland.

Gets Hold of Rifle.

Her strategy succeeded for a time, but during the night Ephram rushed out of doors with his two rifles and started firing them. He told Julienne he would shoot the dogs first so that they might not eat the bodies of the children wnen he killed them. Julienne asked that she be given a rifle to join in the killing of the dogs, and in this way got possession of one of the guns.

A moment later, she testified, Ephram beat her down with his rifle. With her head crushed, an arm broken and bleeding from numerous wounds, Julienne retreated into the one-room shack. Spying a Bible given them by a missionary, she sought to stop her husband by calling his attention to what he had been taught from it.

Again she was beaten down, and when it seemed her husband was ready to kill their infant, after Nattias, their eleven-year-old boy, had fainted from terror, she grasped a sheath knife and plunged it again and again into her husband's breast. Then she seized a rifle and sent its contents into his body.

When her strength returned Julienne made the body secure, with a seal thong, dragged it out of doors and signaled for aid from the mainland.

Faith in Horse Sense Shaken When Three Die

Troy, N. Y.—Horse sense does not always imply a healthy judgment. At least, that is the opinion of Paul Hockman, a farmer near New Carlisle, because three of his horses died from overeating.

On his way to a mill with a load of wheat one of his horses fell dead. Hiring a truck to continue with the wheat, he started to ride the other horse home, but, it, too, soon fell dead He trudged the rest of the way afoot and that evening another horse died in the barnyard.

A postmortem disclosed that the animals had indulged in too much new wheat and dough had formed in their stomachs. Hockman does not know where they got the wheat.

Auto With Headless Driver Appears in "Blind Pig"

Detroit, Mich.—A run-away automobile zigzagged down a street here, jumped a curb, crashed through the side of a brick building and came to a stop a few inches from the bar of an alleged negro bootlegging establishment, with a headless driver at the wheel.

The patrons fled and police were able to find only one witness of the accident, the bartender, who was so frightened they were some time in getting the story from him.

The driver lost control of the machine and was decapitated by part of the wall as the machine plowed through.

PLANTING

"In Light of Moon" Declared Snare and Delusion.

They've unearthed the cynic who is believed to have started the ugly rumor that there ain't no Santa Claus and that the stuff about storks bringing babies was applesauce. He's an "expert" in the U. S. department at Washington, D. C., and his latest revolutionary observation is that the moon has no more effect on farming than it has on the size of holes in spaghetti.

The pronouncement was made after scientists had declared they found nothing to substantiate the belief that certain farm activities must be done by the "dark" or the "light" or some other phase of the moon.

"Moon farming," the experts say, is pure moonshine. The moon is declared to have no influence on weather or soil, and even the light of the full moon is not nearly intense enough to have any effect on plant growth or diseases, it is averred.

The department has refrained from intruding in other provinces in which the moon, as innumerable witnesses can certify, has terrific, not to say overwhelming power. Its deadly effect on lovers has not been questioned.

Just what will be the reaction when this expert observation permeates the overall wearing districts where the almanac is read with as much passion as the isn't known, but it's liable to start a commotion that will be heard for quite a distance or even further.

Anyone who has ever been brought up to regard the almanac as infallible knows that if apples are picked in the light of the moon the bruised places will dry up, while if it is in the dark of the moon they'll decay.

On the "moon farms" the almanac is consulted as a schedule for every activity, from weaning the calf to planting squash seed. The "signs" have to be just right. The almanac is regarded as infallible and followers swear by the signs of the Zodiac.

This unexpected attack on the moon may be taken from some quarters as another move by prohibition proponents to detract from the fair name of Diana. It has been pointed out that the big dipper was observed filled with moonshine on several occasions.

That the moon has nothing to do with farming, no melon farmer will affirm. The success of a melon patch depends upon whether the moon is light or dark when the melons attain ripeness.

There are no indications yet as to what steps will be taken to disabuse the "moon farmers'" minds of the fallacy. Whether the question will be submitted to a national referendum or left up to the supreme court remains to be seen. The point is there's no law against "planting in the moon," yet.

If worst comes to worst and all references to the moon are ordered deleted from textbooks, possibly Clarence Darrow's services can be obtained by the faithful.

Hills of California Rich in Tourmalines

One California mine exhibits tourmaline crystals a foot long and several inches wide, of a deep, luscious pink—termed rubelite—with an outer coating of a darker color. Some of the pink tourmalines have a capping of blue. In the Pala district red tourmalines are the rule; in others rich blues and greens; whilst still others have all these and many other exquisite colors. On the San Jacinto mountains were discovered green tourmalines with red centers, such as Brazil was noted for. Sometimes they are green at one end and red at the other end of the same crystal. Harvard university has one that is eight inches long and two inches in diameter.

Absolutely unique are some that are the exact reverse of the famous double-color Brazilian type—being green internally and red externally. Mesa Grande is notable for these very rare gems and for the large size of its tourmalines. A fine set of these was presented to the Musee d'Histoire Naturells in Paris, and those are wonderful, with their beautiful colors and shades of red, rose, pink, pale green, yellowish green and dark green, and of a size from which are cut gems of from twenty to thirty carats. The two-color tourmalines also make nice cat's-eyes when cut across, and are fashionable in some quarters.

Grid Player Forgot Feeling of Pigskin

Almost everything in football is topic of conversation when gridiron officials in the big conferences are returning home after a game.

Here is one anecdote:

In a game some ten years ago between two midwestern teams the referee penalized one side because a player touched the ball before it was put into play. The point was questioned and several years later the coach asked the player, by that time a business man, whether he really touched the ball.

"Well, I've said I didn't for so long that I just can't remember the feel of that ball any more," was the response.

Sunlight to Heat the Home

Heating engineers have discovered new possibilities in sunlight as a means of heating the home, and are experimenting with the feasibility of building glass roofs. By providing house with glass roofs, properly insulated, it is believed that great quantities of fuel can be saved during the winter months. Doubters of the theory are referred to the sunny bay window of the average house on a winter day where the sun works without scientific assistance.

Learning to Drive

The man had just got his automobile license to drive. "It was some surprise to me," he said, "that I had to learn to drive. I never thought much about it, but my impression had been that all one need do was jump in the car, jerk a few levers and drive. I never dreamed there was anything to learn about it. It looked easy when the other fellow was doing it, and I thought there was nothing to it. But I found I had to take some really stiff lessons before I could drive even respectably well."—Springfield Union.

Few Condors Left

The condor, largest bird in North America and probably the largest flying bird in the world, has a wing spread of from 9 to 11 feet and sometimes reaches a weight of 35 pounds. It is in danger of extinction, there being only about 50 pairs of these birds in the United States. They are great scavengers, and, as the mother bird lays but one egg a season, its loss is irreparable. A heavy penalty is enacted by California from anyone killing the birds or destroying their eggs.

Cape-Coat Liked for Spring Wear

Takes Place of Straight-Lined Garment of Previous Seasons.

Cape-coats will be numerous this spring, due to the fact that they are becoming to most figures and to the fact that women are wanting something other than straight-lined coats of previous seasons.

There will be many models of pastel-hued woolen materials as well as taffetas, corded silks and moires in dark colors. Also there will be street frocks with cape attachments.

The young girl will find the cape-dress or wrap extremely becoming because of its youthfulness. The matron will like its slenderizing effect. Capes that reach between the hip-line and the knee are more becoming to the matron than the more popular hip-lengths.

The cape-coat is one that the seamstress can make quite as well as the tailor since carefully fitted shoulders and armholes are invariably concealed under the cape. Many new models are made of heavy woolen materials which have solid color on one side and plaid or figured design on the reverse side. These materials do not require lining and they are finished at border of hem, sleeves and fronts with binding of the solid colored material or braid. The cape is made detachable so that it, too, can be reversed. A double set of buttons is used in front since each side requires buttons. Thus the two opposite buttons are sewed on with the same thread.

One of the above-described cape-coats recently seen was navy blue on one side and red, green and blue plaid mixture on the opposite side. When worn with the plaid side out it made a startlingly pretty sports coat and when reversed it made an appropriate street wrap. The cape was bound in navy blue serge and the buttons on the plaid side were red and on the blue side, black bone.

Even jumper frocks often use a square or rounded rear cape which begins at the shoulder seams and ends at or just below the normal waistline. Often the capelet is lined in a soft, contrasting shade of silk as in the case of a dove-blue frock with orchid-lined capelet.

Necklet, Newest Novelty, Is Worn Like Bracelet

Necklets are the newest things in the necklace line. They are wide bands of antique gold finish which fit about the neck as a bracelet fits the wrist. Most of them are from 13 to 13½ inches in circumference. They are not flexible but are firm rounded bands of from one-quarter to one-half inch in width. There are narrower necklets which are worn three at a time to match the three narrow wrist bracelets.

Crystal chokers are being worn for evening purposes with crystal-beaded frocks. Flexible collars of rhinestones are also worn with rhinestoned evening frocks. Sometimes wide rhinestone bands in design effect are seen. Rings for evening time are made of filigree and have large stones in imitation of topaz, amethyst, ruby, emerald or aquamarine in accordance with the color of one's gown.

Modernistic Touch

The modernistic touch is seen on many of the new spring hats and garments where several colors are placed in cubistic effect somewhat resembling old-fashioned patchwork. Hats of felt, for instance, may have four or five colors joining in uneven design. Black, gray, yellow and a deep-orange often form a combination of colors for scarfs and hats. There is no regularity or reason about the way these colors are formed in design.

Artificial Corsages

Very few women are wearing artificial corsages in the street this year. Last season every one wore a carnation or orchid pinned on the fur collar. For evening frocks, however, the corsage of chiffon in the exact shade of the frock is still worn on the left shoulder.

Crepe Pajamas

Pajamas of cotton crepe, with appliques of contrasting color and wool or cotton embroidery are exactly like a Chinese costume.

Dick's Tomorrow Came

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"BROKEN your engagement to Dick?" repeated Mrs. Merton, with a long searching look at her daughter.

There was an almost inaudible "yes" and then silence on the part of the girl at the window

"Would you like to tell me about it, Helen?"

Helen shrugged her shoulder. "Anyone might guess, mother. It is Dick's habit of taking the little end of things in such a cheerful way. At the office, for instance, he will not push himself toward a better position. He always says, 'I'll just plug along—my turn will come tomorrow.' Yesterday, it seems that Mr. Franklin suddenly resigned his position as head of that department, and Arnold Smith walked right into the president's office and asked for it—and got it! Dick just calmly poked along, never thought of asking for the advancement, thought it was a fine chance for Arnold Smith! When I scolded him about it he merely laughed and said the same old thing!"

"That his turn would come tomorrow?"

"Yes. Then—one word led to another—and I told him I would not marry a man who did not recognize opportunity when he saw it—and so I ended it."

"Yes, dear, you ended your engagement for the same reason that you blamed Dick—you could not see and recognize an opportunity to hold the love of a mighty fine man with a great future!"

Helen, unconvinced, went upstairs to prepare for her afternoon bridge party. Dick had gone out of her life, she did not realize what had happened.

"It's a wonderful thing for Arnold," said his sister, Freda Smith, "an increase of a thousand a year out of a clear sky—though he did ask for it! Mr. Blake told him that they were going to offer the vacancy to him."

"Helen, I should think Dick Lang deserved promotion if anyone did," ejaculated tactless Beth Blake, "Dick has worked there for years longer than Arnold. I told Dad my opinion last night, and he only laughed and said that Dick would have his promotion some day! I like Dick—he is a dear, and if he was not your property, Helen, I would smile upon him more sweetly than I do now."

It was rather an unhappy summer for Helen Merton. After awhile the news of the broken engagement leaked out, and Helen saw Beth Blake deliberately focus her attention upon Dick Lang. Dick must be working very hard this summer for he looked rather thin and worn, but Helen only met him face to face once, and then his greeting was gravely courteous. He was seen driving Beth Blake in his shabby little car, and Mrs. Blake was quoted as saying that "Dick was a rising young man."

Then one night the blow fell. Merton sat down at the dinner table one August evening and glanced toward his wife. "They say young Lang has lost his position," he said.

"Oh, James, I am so sorry. Poor Dick has worked so hard—" Helen could listen to no more. With a murmured excuse she escaped to the old garden which had known all her joys and all her sorrows. She went to the very end where the gate opened into the orchard and discovered that her heart was racing madly. Poor old Dick and his never-to-be realized "tomorrow"! She was bowed with shame over her treatment of him. Through her tears, she glimpsed the blurred outlines of the old Lang house where Dick lived with his parents. She wanted to run over there as she had done in the past happy years—she wanted to tell Dick she was sorry he had lost his position and if he still loved her she still wanted to marry him and together they would make a future!

She was half way through the orchard when she saw him coming, and she ran to meet him with wet eyes and outstretched hands.

"Oh, Dick, Dick, father has told me, and I am so sorry."

Dick took her hands and looked down at her very tenderly. "What did they tell you, Helen?"

"That you'd lost your position."

"They are saying the same thing all over town," he acknowledged.

Somehow, the incoherent words tumbled from her lips, were at last whispered brokenly on Dick's broad breast.

"And so you are willing to help me build a house, out of nothing?" he asked at last. "Helen, are you willing to tie yourself to a man without a future?"

"We will have each other, Dick, and we will be happy together."

"So we will, darling, but you have misunderstood things a little and I am glad, too, for it reveals that you do love me after all. They are telling it as a great joke that I have lost my position with the Blake company, but they always add that I have a new position there—secretary of the company, isn't that wonderful?"

"Yes—and he's engaged to Beth Blake!"

"I don't care how high he soars as long as I can have you and your tomorrows," sighed Helen.

THE CAROLERS OF CHRISTMAS IN MAIL BOX

Little Seals Means to Us in Circleville Good Health—Let Everybody Help.

You have found them in your mail box, and you will see them everywhere for they are painted on the 1926 Christmas seals. These little seals are sold all over our country during the month of December, and with them go the service of joy and helpfulness. They ask no pay except the gifts from those who want to help carry messages of happiness.

Health and Christmas cheer. We hope this song will open the strings of heart and purse of those who receive them. Look carefully at the seals which the Circleville Benevolent association sends to you by mail, this first week of December. They are sent out for two very good reasons. First to help finance our association. The second and most important is to interest everyone in the necessity of general public health work.

It is absolutely necessary to try to help everyone keep well, because no matter how hard we try, your child and my child are always in danger if others are afflicted. Public health work started by Volunteer organizations joining with state boards of health to reduce the high death rate from tuberculosis. In their efforts to stamp out the great white plague they found that people must learn to keep well by living in pure air, eating clean food and keeping clean surroundings, that meant in the end good health, which enables everyone to throw off the germs which inhabit the body.

The Christmas seal then means to us in Circleville good health, for which the Benevolent association works. Our funds this year are limited and unless we have a generous response to this sale of seals we cannot supply milk to the under nourished children in the schools. The superintendent and teachers tell us what wonderful help that glass of milk is to the children, both physically and mentally. Let us try to prevent sickness rather than try to nurse them back to good health. Show us by a generous response what the Christmas Seal Message has meant to you.

Wife and Fish Gone, Man Lets Train Kill Him

Somerville, N. J.—Disheartened because his wife had left him and one of two friends with whom he had been fishing in the Raritan river had disappeared with their unusually large catch, Stanley Sabotka, thirty-two years old, of South Somerville, sat on a rail of the Felmington branch of the New Jersey Central railroad near here, and was struck by the locomotive of a passenger train and killed.

Sabotka and Stanley Gersarsek and Paul Prevosnee of Somerville had spent the afternoon fishing on a bridge which crosses the Raritan near the estate of the late James B. Duke, about half a mile from this place. Gersarsek, the police said, admitted that they had imbibed liberally of liquor and said that Sabotka frequently had referred to the disappearance of his wife three days ago.

As they were preparing to start for their homes Prevosnee gathered the fish in a bag, and, in the darkness, disappeared. Gersarsek said that he took this as a joke, but that Sabotka was in no mood for jokes of the kind and remarked, "It's tough enough to lose your wife, but when your friend runs away with the fish you've caught, that's the limit."

They were near the end of the bridge when the rumbling of the train was heard by the pair. Gesarsek said that Sabotka ignored his warning, and continued to walk toward the rails.

"Don't walk over there," Gersarsek said he shouted to Sabotka as he ran up to grab him by the arm and pull him back. "The train is coming, and you'll be killed."

"I don't give a d—n if it does come," Gersarsek quoted Sabotka as replying. "My wife has left me, and now Prevosnee has run off with the fish."

Gersarsek added that Sabotka sat on a rail as he said this. He said he tried to pull his companion out of danger but had to leap to one side to save his own life. The next instant the locomotive struck Sabotka.

Goshawks Are Fighters

Sportsmen tell tales of goshawks that illustrate their ferocity and boldness. Charles D. Lanier of Greenwich, Conn., recites an experience he had while shooting in the Carolinas some years ago. A blue heron lit near his ducking blind. Almost immediately it was attacked by a goshawk. The hawk fastened its talons in the heron's back and refused to leave its prey on the approach of Mr Lanier. Both birds were dispatched by the aid of a stick, the goshawk bristling and showing fight to the last.

AMUSEMENTS

Malcolm St. Clair, who gave the screen a sophisticated French comedy in "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," proves with his latest directoral effort, "The Show-Off" that he is just as much at home with the homey, human type of picture. Furthermore, he reveals in this new Paramount film which opened at the Met yesterday, the full flower of his delightful sense of humor and his remarkable genius for mixing laughter and tears, suspense and thrills in just the right proportions.

"The Show-Off" with its simple, domestic backgrounds, its wholesome, cheerful atmosphere, its average, middle class characters and its natural, plausible incidents, presents a vivid cross-section of modern American family life.

Adapted by Pierre Collings from the popular stage success by George Kelly, the story concerns itself with the exploits of one, Aubrey Piper, a braggart and liar or unquenchable optimism and irrepressible hilarity, who marries Amy Fisher, daughter of a typical, middle-class family. His egotism and nerve get him and the family into unpleasant situations. A financial crisis develops in the Fisher household, when they are forced to pay a fine of $1000 as a penalty for Aubrey's reckless driving. In the end the show-off redeems himself by selling an invention his young brother-in-law has been working on.

Ford Sterling gives an engaging performance in the title role. He paints Aubrey with a sympathetic brush and succeeds in arousing genuine admiration by the sheer artistry with which he plays the conceited fool. Lois Wilson is both charming and effective as the loyal Amy. Louise Brooks and Gregory Kelly proves admirably suited to their respective characterizations.

HARTMAN THEATER.

Mrs. Fiske, unchallenged as America's most distinguished star of the stage, comes to the Hartman theater, Columbus, on next Thursday, December 2, for three days only, as Mrs. Alving in Ibsen's great human drama, "Ghosts." It is an interesting fact that, whereas Ibsen gave two whole years to the writing of this play, Mrs. Fiske has devoted almost five years to study of the drama and its central character before offering it to the public.

As always, Mrs. Fiske's supporting cast is of her own careful selection. As the son, Oswald Alving, the young New York Theodore St. John, who has won success playing in Paris and Berlin in the native languages, is cast. Walter Ringham plays Pastor Manders. Mr. Ringham is well known for his association with Sir Charles Wyndham, Sir Forbes-Robertson and others in his native England, and as leading man to Grace George and Ethel Barrymore and in numerous other Broadway productions. The vital part of Regina is played by Jarvis Kerr, a Vassar graduate of the class of 1925, who literally stepped from school to success on the professional stage of New York. Miss Kerr was chosen by Mrs. Fiske from more than fifty actresses considered for this part.

The version of "Ghosts" which Mrs. Fiske will present is Harrison Grey Fiske's revision of the English translation by William Archer. It is asserted that to those familiar with this great modern drama, it will come in the nature of a welcome and thrilling revelation, the faithful interpretation if Ibsen's intent and purpose in writing a human play of life in all its strength and frailty. The company brings its own complete production which is declared to be exceptionally handsome and strikingly impressive from the pictorial viewpoint.

Pole Cat Sole Resident of Town That Was to Be

Lofton, Texas.—The sole resident of Lofton is a polecat; the sole structure of the "city" is a white sign bearing the word "Lofton," reared high over the plains.

But despite this paucity of citizens and absence of buildings Lofton appears on all good Texas maps, is on a good railroad, has a first-class highway at its front door and is distinguished by a grassy lawn that covers the whole town.

The town, in fact, is one of those lost hopes that sometimes spring from the coming of a railroad. The ground was laid off as a townsite, but the town never materialized. That was 13 years ago. The railroad was built, the highway was constructed, the town was named, but nobody settled there except the beautifully striped cat. This animal has been there so long that he is accepted as an institution and remains a solitary ruler of his domain.

Washington a Poor Speller

History now records that Oliver Cromwell was found to have been jeered at in school for a dunce. George Washington never learned how to spell some of the simplest words. James Garfield was once called a good-for-nothing canal-boat man, and Grant constantly stood at the foot of his class at West Point. Andrew Johnson, it is said, was unable to write his own name at eighteen.

SUIT FILED BY MOTHER

To Contest Will of Her Son, Charging Two Women Took Advantage of the Testator.

Chicago, Nov. 30.—(UP.)—Mrs. Mary Keeling, Pasadena, Calif., has begun a fight to set aside the will of her son, Leonard M. Keeling, which leaves $104,000 to two women, who, Mrs. Keeling alleged, were almost strangers to Keeling.

Keeling was shot to death while hunting near Eagle River, Wis., last August.

Mrs. Keeling charged in her petition that Mrs. Harriet Ostrom, Wilmette, Ill., took advantage of "Keeling's befuddled condition due to much drinking and induced him to propose marriage despite the fact that she was a married woman."

The other woman named in the petition is Miss Marie Luehrsen, Chicago bookkeeper.

Miss Luehrsen and Mrs. Ostrom were given approximately $52,000 by the terms of the will and $10,000 was set aside to be kept in trust, the income to go to Keeling's grandmother, Mrs. Louisa M. Leonard, Pasadena.

About $26,000 was given to Keeling's mother.

Lesson for December 5

RUTH AND NAOMI

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:14-22.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of Ruth.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Ruth a loyal Daughter.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ruth the Loyal.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Message of the Book of Ruth

In order to grasp the matter contained in the lesson subject, there must be swept into view the whole book of Ruth. The lesson text which is to be printed has been confined to the first chapter, verses 14-22.

I. Ruth's Connection With Naomi (1:1-15).

On account of famine in Bethlehem of Judah, Naomi with her husband and two sons sojourned in the land of Moab. After the death of her husband her two sons married Moabitish women. After a time her sons died also. After the death of her sons Naomi resolved to return to her homeland, having heard that the Lord had visited his people in giving them bread. They went to Moab to escape trouble but only got into more. It was not until Naomi was thus chastised that she resolved to return. One purpose of God's chastisement is to cause His children to return. Naomi had the good sense to recognize that the hand of the Lord was upon her for good. When the time came for her to go, Ruth and Orpah accompanied her for a distance. This she permitted but determined to place before them frankly the difficulties which would necessarily confront them.

II. Ruth's Noble Choice (1:16-18).

Much as Naomi loved her daughters-in-law, she would not have them go into this matter blindly. She wished them to know the seriousness of their undertaking. She told them the worst that could come upon them. This principle ought to be carried out by us in all our relations in life. In this respect Jesus is our supreme example.

1. No chance to marry again. Naomi told her that she had no more sons for whom she could wait. In that day to be unmarried was the greatest disgrace. Society differed then from now. No avenues were left open by which a woman could earn her living and be independent. Furthermore, it was against God's law for the Jews to marry outside of their own people.

2. She must renounce her gods. Her idolatrous worship could not be carried on in the land where God's people dwelt. This was delicately touched upon when Orpah went back (v. 15). Orpah went back when it was plain there was no chance to get a husband. Now Naomi puts an additional test upon Ruth, that of giving up her religion. Ruth was equal to the occasion. Her mind was fully made up. She was willing to accept as her God the one who was able to produce in His subjects the nobility of character she had observed in Naomi. Naomi's very frankness in dealing with her caused Ruth to be more determined to cast her lot with her. Ruth's position was so definite and unfaltering that the very expressions have come down to us in words which "no poetry has outrivaled, and no pathos has exceeded, and which have gone through centuries with the music that will not let them be forgotten." She was determined to share Naomi's journey, her home, her God, her lot in life, and her grave.

III. Blessings Which Attended Ruth's Faithfulness.

Ruth was never sorry for her choice, because:

1. She found the true God (1:16).

Instead of her heathen god who was unable to help her, she now had the living God, the God of Israel.

2. She found human friends (ch. 2).

As she went to glean in the field she was led to the field of Boaz, a man of wealth and grace. The servants of Boaz treated her with consideration.

3. A good husband and a happy home (chs. 3, 4).

She not only secured a husband, but a man of God who had an abundance of this world's goods.

4. An honored place in the Israelitish nation (4:13-17).

Though she had to forsake her own people she became one of a nobler people.

5. She became a link in the chain of Christ's ancestry (4:18-22; cf. Matt. 1:5).

The one who fully decides for Christ and gives up all for Him shall gain a hundredfold in this life, and in the world to come eternal life.

Depend on God

Remember that nothing can ever harm you when you have given your life into the keeping of God. Man is powerless against Him who is fortified of the Almighty. You are a child of God—immune, secure.—R. J. Campbell.

Jesus' Achievements

One is sure that a great deal that Jesus achieved He achieved because He was able to give this deathless hope to the hearts of those to whom He spoke.—Robert E. Speer.

Tea and Tongues in Tibet

In Tibet it is the custom of natives, when meeting, to stick out their tongues as a mark of respect. A peasant who would accost a person of higher rank without doing this would be regarded as grossly discourteous. Tea drinking is also necessary at social visits, the tea being emulsified with butter flavored with soda.

Don't put off having those fall and winter garments cleaned; you may need them.
BARNHILL'S.

Birds That "Drum"

The biological survey says that the ruffed grouse is the bird which produces the drumming sound. Partridge and pheasant are both terms applied locally to ruffed grouse, and in that sense it may be said that both the partridge and pheasant produce such sounds. The ruffed grouse is called partridge in the North and pheasant in the South.

J. R. DAVIS, DRY LEADER, TENDERS RESIGNATION

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 30.—James R. Davis, assistant federal prohibition administrator for Michigan and Ohio, today tendered his resignation, effective Jan. 1.

He is known locally as the "father of the prohibition navy" on the Detroit River, where he established a river patrol to war on border liquor smugglers in 1921.

For the last year Davis has been stationed at Columbus, where he served as assistant director in charge of issuing permits to manufacturers of alcohol for industrial and art purposes in Michigan and Ohio.

The Hole in Macaroni

A visitor's query: "What makes the hole in macaroni"? was answered the other day by a macaroni and spaghetti factory. A bronze pin does it. Bronze is used for many reasons, but principally because it is clean and will not rust. Numerous little bronze pins are located within the perforations of the macaroni die. Dough is forced through the top of the die by hydraulic pressure, and as it comes through the bottom it takes on the well-known form of macaroni. A similar bronze die forms spaghetti, a smaller bronze pin being used.—New York Times.

WE PRINT THE NEWS.

CRANBERRIES AND CELERY NOW INTO THEIR OWN

Celery and cranberries, once carefully grown as a Thanksgiving delicacy exclusively, are now on the market all but a few months in the year.

Growers have taught us that cranberries are good with other things aside from turkey. They have guaranteed the quality and standard of the berries and have won the consumers' taste, according to L. G. Foster of the department of rural economics at the Ohio State University. The market supplies cranberries eight months a year now instead of just during the holiday season.

The berries are still a Thanksgiving standby, according to the Cranberry Growers Exchange, as 41 per cent of the yearly crop is marketed in November. Of the other seven months in the marketing season 12 per cent are on the market in September, 25 per cent in October and 13 per cent in December; the remaining 9 per cent are consumed during January, February, March and April.

Only in comparatively recent years has celery come into general use in America. A stalk or two with the Thanksgiving turkey has usually been enough for most families. Now it ranks high among commercial garden crops and holds its place in relishes, soups, salads and condiments.

Yields of 50,000 stalks an acre are not uncommon in adapted sections, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The 22,600 acres planted last year produced enough to give each person in the country one stalk of celery every 40 days.

WAYNE B. WHEELER PREFERS SCOTCH

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the anti-saloon league, prefers Scotch whisky as a beverage for American palates. In this respect he is not alone, for a great many other citizens in days gone by have been fond of Scotch and they will agree with Mr. Wheeler that it is a great beverage.

It must not be inferred from this that Mr. Wheeler is backsliding any on the temperance question. He only prefers Scotch as a medical beverage and not as a regular palate tickler. Rather than open up the American distilleries to the manufacture of medical whisky Mr. Wheeler would prefer that sick Americans should have their Scotch.

"The wets," he declared, "have persistently declared that the only place to get pure whisky is in Scotland, or some other foreign country. If they are right, the needed supply can be secured abroad. We need not buy any for at least five years and could tell better then how much was needed. Any needed supply could be imported in a very short time to fill any deficiency between warehouse supply and the demands of the hour. If the government tries the foreign purchase plan for a short time and finds it unsatisfactory, it can start the distilleries whenever the contingency arises."—Ohio Activities in Washington, Columbus Dispatch.

Maybe This Explains How Sales Are Made

From the inner office of the palatial quarters of Sellem and company, dealers in bonds, suddenly burst a roar of laughter. It was the hearty reverberating kind of laughter that betokened complete and unrestrained enjoyment. It echoed through the building until even persons passing in the hall stopped to wonder. It kept up for one minute, two minutes, three minutes, three minutes and thirty seconds. The office boy held a watch on it to make sure.

Five minutes later the prize salesman emerged, beaming with smiles, escorting a stranger, who looked equally pleased. When the stranger had been duly bowed out, the office manager turned to the prize salesman.

"What was the grand joke, Harry?" asked the manager.

"Why," said the prize salesman, "he told me that one about the newspaper reporter who wrote that the bride's feet were encased in fairy boots and when it came out in print it said ferry boats."

"But," said the manager, "you must have read that in an almanac when you were a boy. Why such extraordinary hilarity?"

"Sh," replied the prize salesman, "he was a customer."—Buffalo Express.

Should Wear Gown That Is Becoming

New Evening Frocks Afford Milady Opportunity to Display Charms.

Given the diversified choice that spring has offered, every woman may now choose her new evening frock strictly according to type, with particular reference to the concealment of her less lovely features, often painfully apparent in the robe du soir. The Parisian ideal of a beautiful gown, says a fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, is not one that is so handsome and ornate that it makes the onlooker forget the woman who is wearing it, but one that shows up to its best advantage every physical asset that woman possesses, and veils or hides every possible defect.

For instance, though the very short skirt is more than holding its own in present fashions and seems likely to continue through the coming season, the woman whom Nature has handicapped with thick ankles, though forced to wear short skirts in tailor-made gowns, will hasten to adopt all the tricks of the mode that modify this defect in her formal attire. She will follow the fashion of the robe de style or the broken hemline by pointed or oval draperies that fall below the level of the hem and veil just that thickness that would otherwise spoil a charming effect.

If she has the misfortune to be flat chested, now that graceful curves are appreciated, she will soften her corsage with a full jabot collar or cascade flounce. The fullness of a chiffon plastron, all tucks and plaits, will be finished by a soft cravatte collar that falls in a soft bow and ends to break any severity of line. If she has not an attractive neckline she will conceal the fact with little floating scarfs or a cleverly adjusted bow collar. Thin arms will be veiled by gracefully full sleeves, and harsh hands will be hidden by long pointed cuffs that half cover them.

The formal afternoon gown in Paris at the moment is of bright, rich coloring, deep wine red being a great favorite with shades of hunter's green a good second, while black, especially satin, and used in conjunction with gold lame, is always a successful choice.

For anything but the smartest restaurants the most successful dinner gowns are always black. They may be slightly decollette and sleeveless, but should look well with one of the small black hats that give such indescribable chic to the dinner gown. The dress may be of satin or even chiffon or lace.

Gold sheath gowns covered with rich and elaborate embroidery in Persian or Chinese designs carried out in beads and silks are very much in vogue.

Kiddies' Street Hats and Coats for Spring

Fine Stitching Adds to Beauty of Garment

One of the things that most cheapens the appearance of ready-made clothing—and of some home-made clothing, for that matter—is the conspicuously coarse stitching. The stitches may be too long or the thread too coarse; usually both faults are present. The most beautiful stitching is done with as close a stitch and as fine a thread as possible. It often pays, for the increased beauty of appearance, to take out coarse stitching on some conspicuous part of a dress or blouse and do it over properly.

BONES OF MAMMOTH FOUND IN FLORIDA

Skeleton Is Best That Has Been Discovered on Gulf Coast, Say Scientists.

Washington, Nov. 30.—The bones of a mammoth washed up on what were then the shores of Florida 500,000 years ago, have been brought to the Smithsonian Institute by Dr. J. W. Gidley, as the result of an excavation at Venice, Florida.

The skeleton, though not complete, is the best yet discovered on the west coast of Florida. All the teeth were found, as well as the complete foot structure, the lower jaw, a tusk and a shoulder blade and part of the vertebra.

Some of the bones were broken and on the surface of the breaks, barnacles which are now fossilized had attached themselves. From these facts Dr. Gidley deduced that the bones had been washed up on the old shore of the Gulf of Mexico, though this is now four miles inland from the present coast. They must have been quickly buried in the sand for they are very little corroded.

The fossil was discovered by the Venice Co., a subsidiary of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which immediately offered it to the Smithsonian Institution as a gift. The company's co-operation enabled Dr. Gidley to rescue as much of the skeleton as possible.

"This discovery," said Dr. Gidley, "seems to be a Columbian mammoth, types of which have been found in territories to the north of Florida."

The Secret

The secret of friendship is just the secret of all spiritual blessing. The way to get is to give. The selfish in the end can never get anything but selfishness. The hard find hardness everywhere. As you mete it is meted out to you.—Hugh Black, in "Friendship."

Cattle and Lightning

The greater portion of the loss of cattle killed by lightning is caused by cattle drifting against wire fences during thunderstorms and being struck by lightning, which may be collected by the fence at a distance and brought to the herd with sufficient force to kill them. It is not often that cattle are killed by direct stroke unless it be under trees.

William, an Australian parrot, after gnawing his way out of 18 cages in the London zoo in three years, has just been placed in his nineteenth cage, which is made of fine metal shavings.

SAVINGS PLAN OF SYSTEMATIC ACCUMULATIONS

Man Should Adjust Conditions of Life About Him to His Income.

Now is a good time to make plans for the coming year. No matter what ideas are incorporated in these plans they should include some provision for the systematic saving of money.

Many persons make resolves of this kind each year, hold to their resolutions for a while and then let them go.

Quite often this is due less to instability of character than to defective planning.

It is as much a mistake to try to save beyond one's means as it is to try to live beyond one's means.

There are rightful and necessary demands made upon every individual. If we try to save too much, especially if we are beginners in thrift, we court failure.

The amount to be saved is a matter of adjustment. The man who has never saved money will find that he can save more the second year on the same income than he was able to save the first. This is because, with the development of thrift habits, he not only finds it easier to restrict his extravagances and unessentials, but he finds his efficiency increased. He develops short cuts. He learns that, with ingenuity, he can attain the same results often at less cost than when he was not under self discipline.

It is for these reasons that every savings plan should be based on the idea of systematic accumulation. There is little value in sporadic saving but there is incalculable merit in putting aside specified amounts regularly regardless of how inconsequential they may be.

Plan your savings for the coming year along sensible lines. Adjust them to your income and to the conditions of life about you.

Goethe observed that "enthusiasm is of the greatest value when we are not carried away by it." This can be applied to saving money as well as to everything else in life.

Even in thrift there is harm in over-enthusiasm.

What you are depends upon your surroundings. On a dark night one star is luminous.

When we forgive an enemy we usually reserve the right to watch him thereafter.

Fisherman's Lunch

By SUSAN GIBBS

(Copyright.)

TERTIA was busily painting letters on the bow of her comfortable, safe-looking rowboat. "Fisherman's Luck," said the old man who had been sitting on a rock watching her as she traced the white letters on the spic and span green surface of the bow.

Tertia laughed. "Look again," she said, merrily. "I suppose nine out of every ten who read it will see it the same way." Then she remembered that the old man's eyesight might be failing and she read for him, "It's 'Fisherman's Lunch,' Uncle."

Everybody along the shore called him "Uncle" although no one who had the right by kinship had ever been known in these parts.

"Wall, what does that mean, Tertia?" he asked. "And why did you paint out the letters your father had put on the boat?"

"I'll answer your first question last, Uncle," replied Tertia. "Father named the boat after me, Tertia. He had named me Tertia because I was the third child and his fancy was for naming all his children by numbering them in Latin. I don't like the name for a boat, and now that Dad is gone he can't be hurt. And—your second answer: I have gone into a business of my own with this boat and the new name is an advertisement."

In this cove where Tertia Miller meant to ply her new trade there was good fishing.

She was going to carry sandwiches, cakes, home-made doughnuts and pies in season in her small boat and row about among the silent groups of fishermen each day at mealtimes.

Her mother was no longer young and they lived together in the little cottage that belonged to the club and which they were to be permitted to use as long as they liked. This was in the form of a pension to her mother in appreciation of the long services of old Captain Miller.

Her brightly painted boat caught the eye of every fisherman as she rowed along and it was not long before she was handing out lunches to those who hailed her. If coming alongside disturbed the home-life of the gentle fish, no man cared since he was to be refreshed by so splendid a lunch as Tertia provided.

Rain or shine, early and late, she was out with her lunch boat and she and her mother were both surprised at the amount of profit they found to their credit.

Tertia was happy. She told herself it was the success of her project that made her heart sing. It was, she argued, because of the joy that achievement brings to one.

Perhaps that was a part of the reason. But there was another cause for her gladness. Tertia was experiencing the first treasured moments of romance.

Archie Dove had put into the harbor one stormy night and for lack of knowledge of the water had anchored his craft until dawn should give him a better idea of his locality. And—at dawn, when the fishermen began to come out to get their catch on the flood tide after the storm, had come the little craft which bore the letters, "Fisherman's Lunch."

It seemed almost to Archie as if Tertia in all her beauty had come toward him out of the very dawn itself, so whimsically, so fancifully had he first beheld her.

He had come out of his cabin to begin to get under way. He was cruizing alone so as to work out his novel. The green boat was approaching and the soft morning light shone on the gold of Tertia's hair.

"Fisherman's Lunch," he read to himself when he could discern the letters. "Fisherman's Luck, I'm thinking," he added.

Tertia rowed slowly, as was her custom.

"Have you—something to eat?" he asked.

Tertia smiled. "I should think I had—fresh coffee cake and doughnuts and—"

Archie stopped her then and there. He was too hungry to listen without acting.

"May I have—some?" he asked, still with a boyish shyness.

It was only a moment before she was alongside his boat and he had climbed down into the one bit of seat that remained empty in her boat.

When she explained to him her work he suggested that as it was early and that there were few fishermen out she might wait for a cup of coffee that he could make in his own galley?

Tertia did. He deftly came aboard her boat with mugs of coffee and for the first time Tertia ate of her own wares.

Archie did not get under way. He found reasons for remaining in the harbor to write his book and he found himself too busy to go ashore to buy provisions, thereby making it necessary for him to get almost everything he ate from Tertia.

His novel progressed and his heroine suddenly began to look like Tertia.

He had told her all this—and more—and that is why the little captain of "Fisherman's Lunch" was so thrillingly happy.

"They say it's bad luck to change the name of a boat," muttered old Uncle one evening when he watched Tertia walking along the beach with her new-found lover. "But—that don't look much like bad luck to me," he added, grinning his wrinkled old grin.

J. R. DAVIS, DRY LEADER, TENDERS RESIGNATION

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 30.—James R. Davis, assistant federal prohibition administrator for Michigan and Ohio, today tendered his resignation, effective Jan. 1.

He is known locally as the "father of the prohibition navy" on the Detroit River, where he established a river patrol to war on border liquor smugglers in 1921.

For the last year Davis has been stationed at Columbus, where he served as assistant director in charge of issuing permits to manufacturers of alcohol for industrial and art purposes in Michigan and Ohio.

The Hole in Macaroni

A visitor's query: "What makes the hole in macaroni"? was answered the other day by a macaroni and spaghetti factory. A bronze pin does it. Bronze is used for many reasons, but principally because it is clean and will not rust. Numerous little bronze pins are located within the perforations of the macaroni die. Dough is forced through the top of the die by hydraulic pressure, and as it comes through the bottom it takes on the well-known form of macaroni. A similar bronze die forms spaghetti, a smaller bronze pin being used.—New York Times.

WE PRINT THE NEWS.

CRANBERRIES AND CELERY NOW INTO THEIR OWN

Celery and cranberries, once carefully grown as a Thanksgiving delicacy exclusively, are now on the market all but a few months in the year.

Growers have taught us that cranberries are good with other things aside from turkey. They have guaranteed the quality and standard of the berries and have won the consumers' taste, according to L. G. Foster of the department of rural economics at the Ohio State University. The market supplies cranberries eight months a year now instead of just during the holiday season.

The berries are still a Thanksgiving standby, according to the Cranberry Growers Exchange, as 41 per cent of the yearly crop is marketed in November. Of the other seven months in the marketing season 12 per cent are on the market in September, 25 per cent in October and 13 per cent in December; the remaining 9 per cent are consumed during January, February, March and April.

Only in comparatively recent years has celery come into general use in America. A stalk or two with the Thanksgiving turkey has usually been enough for most families. Now it ranks high among commercial garden crops and holds its place in relishes, soups, salads and condiments.

Yields of 50,000 stalks an acre are not uncommon in adapted sections, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The 22,600 acres planted last year produced enough to give each person in the country one stalk of celery every 40 days.

WAYNE B. WHEELER PREFERS SCOTCH

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the anti-saloon league, prefers Scotch whisky as a beverage for American palates. In this respect he is not alone, for a great many other citizens in days gone by have been fond of Scotch and they will agree with Mr. Wheeler that it is a great beverage.

It must not be inferred from this that Mr. Wheeler is backsliding any on the temperance question. He only prefers Scotch as a medical beverage and not as a regular palate tickler. Rather than open up the American distilleries to the manufacture of medical whisky Mr. Wheeler would prefer that sick Americans should have their Scotch.

"The wets," he declared, "have persistently declared that the only place to get pure whisky is in Scotland, or some other foreign country. If they are right, the needed supply can be secured abroad. We need not buy any for at least five years and could tell better then how much was needed. Any needed supply could be imported in a very short time to fill any deficiency between warehouse supply and the demands of the hour. If the government tries the foreign purchase plan for a short time and finds it unsatisfactory, it can start the distilleries whenever the contingency arises."—Ohio Activities in Washington, Columbus Dispatch.

Maybe This Explains How Sales Are Made

From the inner office of the palatial quarters of Sellem and company, dealers in bonds, suddenly burst a roar of laughter. It was the hearty reverberating kind of laughter that betokened complete and unrestrained enjoyment. It echoed through the building until even persons passing in the hall stopped to wonder. It kept up for one minute, two minutes, three minutes, three minutes and thirty seconds. The office boy held a watch on it to make sure.

Five minutes later the prize salesman emerged, beaming with smiles, escorting a stranger, who looked equally pleased. When the stranger had been duly bowed out, the office manager turned to the prize salesman.

"What was the grand joke, Harry?" asked the manager.

"Why," said the prize salesman, "he told me that one about the newspaper reporter who wrote that the bride's feet were encased in fairy boots and when it came out in print it said ferry boats."

"But," said the manager, "you must have read that in an almanac when you were a boy. Why such extraordinary hilarity?"

"Sh," replied the prize salesman, "he was a customer."—Buffalo Express.

Should Wear Gown That Is Becoming

Given the diversified choice that spring has offered, every woman may now choose her new evening frock strictly according to type, with particular reference to the concealment of her less lovely features, often painfully apparent in the robe du soir. The Parisian ideal of a beautiful gown, says a fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, is not one that is so handsome and ornate that it makes the onlooker forget the woman who is wearing it, but one that shows up to its best advantage every physical asset that woman possesses, and veils or hides every possible defect.

For instance, though the very short skirt is more than holding its own in present fashions and seems likely to continue through the coming season, the woman whom Nature has handicapped with thick ankles, though forced to wear short skirts in tailor-made gowns, will hasten to adopt all the tricks of the mode that modify this defect in her formal attire. She will follow the fashion of the robe de style or the broken hemline by pointed or oval draperies that fall below the level of the hem and veil just that thickness that would otherwise spoil a charming effect.

If she has the misfortune to be flat chested, now that graceful curves are appreciated, she will soften her corsage with a full jabot collar or cascade flounce. The fullness of a chiffon plastron, all tucks and plaits, will be finished by a soft cravatte collar that falls in a soft bow and ends to break any severity of line. If she has not an attractive neckline she will conceal the fact with little floating scarfs or a cleverly adjusted bow collar. Thin arms will be veiled by gracefully full sleeves, and harsh hands will be hidden by long pointed cuffs that half cover them.

The formal afternoon gown in Paris at the moment is of bright, rich coloring, deep wine red being a great favorite with shades of hunter's green a good second, while black, especially satin, and used in conjunction with gold lame, is always a successful choice.

For anything but the smartest restaurants the most successful dinner gowns are always black. They may be slightly decollette and sleeveless, but should look well with one of the small black hats that give such indescribable chic to the dinner gown. The dress may be of satin or even chiffon or lace.

Gold sheath gowns covered with rich and elaborate embroidery in Persian or Chinese designs carried out in beads and silks are very much in vogue.

Kiddies' Street Hats and Coats for Spring

Fine Stitching Adds to Beauty of Garment

One of the things that most cheapens the appearance of ready-made clothing—and of some home-made clothing, for that matter—is the conspicuously coarse stitching. The stitches may be too long or the thread too coarse; usually both faults are present. The most beautiful stitching is done with as close a stitch and as fine a thread as possible. It often pays, for the increased beauty of appearance, to take out coarse stitching on some conspicuous part of a dress or blouse and do it over properly.

BONES OF MAMMOTH FOUND IN FLORIDA

Skeleton Is Best That Has Been Discovered on Gulf Coast, Say Scientists.

Washington, Nov. 30.—The bones of a mammoth washed up on what were then the shores of Florida 500,000 years ago, have been brought to the Smithsonian Institute by Dr. J. W. Gidley, as the result of an excavation at Venice, Florida.

The skeleton, though not complete, is the best yet discovered on the west coast of Florida. All the teeth were found, as well as the complete foot structure, the lower jaw, a tusk and a shoulder blade and part of the vertebra.

Some of the bones were broken and on the surface of the breaks, barnacles which are now fossilized had attached themselves. From these facts Dr. Gidley deduced that the bones had been washed up on the old shore of the Gulf of Mexico, though this is now four miles inland from the present coast. They must have been quickly buried in the sand for they are very little corroded.

The fossil was discovered by the Venice Co., a subsidiary of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which immediately offered it to the Smithsonian Institution as a gift. The company's co-operation enabled Dr. Gidley to rescue as much of the skeleton as possible.

"This discovery," said Dr. Gidley, "seems to be a Columbian mammoth, types of which have been found in territories to the north of Florida."

The secret of friendship is just the secret of all spiritual blessing. The way to get is to give. The selfish in the end can never get anything but selfishness. The hard find hardness everywhere. As you mete it is meted out to you.—Hugh Black, in "Friendship."

Cattle and Lightning

The greater portion of the loss of cattle killed by lightning is caused by cattle drifting against wire fences during thunderstorms and being struck by lightning, which may be collected by the fence at a distance and brought to the herd with sufficient force to kill them. It is not often that cattle are killed by direct stroke unless it be under trees.

SAVINGS PLAN OF SYSTEMATIC ACCUMULATIONS

Man Should Adjust Conditions of Life About Him to His Income.

Now is a good time to make plans for the coming year. No matter what ideas are incorporated in these plans they should include some provision for the systematic saving of money.

Many persons make resolves of this kind each year, hold to their resolutions for a while and then let them go.

Quite often this is due less to instability of character than to defective planning.

It is as much a mistake to try to save beyond one's means as it is to try to live beyond one's means.

There are rightful and necessary demands made upon every individual. If we try to save too much, especially if we are beginners in thrift, we court failure.

The amount to be saved is a matter of adjustment. The man who has never saved money will find that he can save more the second year on the same income than he was able to save the first. This is because, with the development of thrift habits, he not only finds it easier to restrict his extravagances and unessentials, but he finds his efficiency increased. He develops short cuts. He learns that, with ingenuity, he can attain the same results often at less cost than when he was not under self discipline.

It is for these reasons that every savings plan should be based on the idea of systematic accumulation. There is little value in sporadic saving but there is incalculable merit in putting aside specified amounts regularly regardless of how inconsequential they may be.

Plan your savings for the coming year along sensible lines. Adjust them to your income and to the conditions of life about you.

Goethe observed that "enthusiasm is of the greatest value when we are not carried away by it." This can be applied to saving money as well as to everything else in life.

Even in thrift there is harm in over-enthusiasm.

What you are depends upon your surroundings. On a dark night one star is luminous.

When we forgive an enemy we usually reserve the right to watch him thereafter.

Fisherman's Lunch

By SUSAN GIBBS

(Copyright.)

TERTIA was busily painting letters on the bow of her comfortable, safe-looking rowboat. "Fisherman's Luck," said the old man who had been sitting on a rock watching her as she traced the white letters on the spic and span green surface of the bow.

Tertia laughed. "Look again," she said, merrily. "I suppose nine out of every ten who read it will see it the same way." Then she remembered that the old man's eyesight might be failing and she read for him, "It's 'Fisherman's Lunch,' Uncle."

Everybody along the shore called him "Uncle" although no one who had the right by kinship had ever been known in these parts.

"Wall, what does that mean, Tertia?" he asked. "And why did you paint out the letters your father had put on the boat?"

"I'll answer your first question last, Uncle," replied Tertia. "Father named the boat after me, Tertia. He had named me Tertia because I was the third child and his fancy was for naming all his children by numbering them in Latin. I don't like the name for a boat, and now that Dad is gone he can't be hurt. And—your second answer: I have gone into a business of my own with this boat and the new name is an advertisement."

In this cove where Tertia Miller meant to ply her new trade there was good fishing.

She was going to carry sandwiches, cakes, home-made doughnuts and pies in season in her small boat and row about among the silent groups of fishermen each day at mealtimes.

Her mother was no longer young and they lived together in the little cottage that belonged to the club and which they were to be permitted to use as long as they liked. This was in the form of a pension to her mother in appreciation of the long services of old Captain Miller.

Her brightly painted boat caught the eye of every fisherman as she rowed along and it was not long before she was handing out lunches to those who hailed her. If coming alongside disturbed the home-life of the gentle fish, no man cared since he was to be refreshed by so splendid a lunch as Tertia provided.

Rain or shine, early and late, she was out with her lunch boat and she and her mother were both surprised at the amount of profit they found to their credit.

Tertia was happy. She told herself it was the success of her project that made her heart sing. It was, she argued, because of the joy that achievement brings to one.

Perhaps that was a part of the reason. But there was another cause for her gladness. Tertia was experiencing the first treasured moments of romance.

Archie Dove had put into the harbor one stormy night and for lack of knowledge of the water had anchored his craft until dawn should give him a better idea of his locality. And—at dawn, when the fishermen began to come out to get their catch on the flood tide after the storm, had come the little craft which bore the letters, "Fisherman's Lunch."

It seemed almost to Archie as if Tertia in all her beauty had come toward him out of the very dawn itself, so whimsically, so fancifully had he first beheld her.

He had come out of his cabin to begin to get under way. He was cruizing alone so as to work out his novel. The green boat was approaching and the soft morning light shone on the gold of Tertia's hair.

"Fisherman's Lunch," he read to himself when he could discern the letters. "Fisherman's Luck, I'm thinking," he added.

Tertia rowed slowly, as was her custom.

"Have you—something to eat?" he asked.

Tertia smiled. "I should think I had—fresh coffee cake and doughnuts and—"

Archie stopped her then and there. He was too hungry to listen without acting.

"May I have—some?" he asked, still with a boyish shyness.

It was only a moment before she was alongside his boat and he had climbed down into the one bit of seat that remained empty in her boat.

When she explained to him her work he suggested that as it was early and that there were few fishermen out she might wait for a cup of coffee that he could make in his own galley?

Tertia did. He deftly came aboard her boat with mugs of coffee and for the first time Tertia ate of her own wares.

Archie did not get under way. He found reasons for remaining in the harbor to write his book and he found himself too busy to go ashore to buy provisions, thereby making it necessary for him to get almost everything he ate from Tertia.

His novel progressed and his heroine suddenly began to look like Tertia.

He had told her all this—and more—and that is why the little captain of "Fisherman's Lunch" was so thrillingly happy.

"They say it's bad luck to change the name of a boat," muttered old Uncle one evening when he watched Tertia walking along the beach with her new-found lover. "But—that don't look much like bad luck to me," he added, grinning his wrinkled old grin.
